ION EXCHANGE CHROMATOGRAPHY

INTRODUCTION

- Ion exchange chromatography is a process in which an interchange of ions of like signs takes place between a solution and an insoluble solid (ion exchanger) in contact with the solution.
- A mixture of similarly charged ions can be separated by using an ion exchange resin which exchanges ions according to their relative affinities.

ION EXCHANGE RESINS

Ion exchange resins are insoluble polymer consisting of a matrix that carries a fixed charge and mobile active ions (counter ions) which are loosely attached to the matrix.

Properties

- Complex in nature and polymeric.
- Insoluble in water and organic solvents like benzene, CCl₄ & ether.
- Contain active/counter ions that will exchange reversibly with other ions in a surrounding solution.

Types of ion exchange resins

- 1. CATION EXCHANGE RESIN
- 2. ANION EXCHANGE RESIN

ANION EXCHANGE RESIN

It is a polymer containing anion or quaternary ammonium groups as integral parts of the resin and equivalent amount of anions, such as Cl⁻, SO₄²⁻, OH⁻ ions etc. When an anion exchange resin is treated with HCl, the substituted ammonium cations are obtained.

TOPIC : ANTHRACENE

STRUCTURE OF ANTHRACENE

Anthracene is a well known aromatic compound.
It has cyclic, planar structure and follow Huckel's rule having total no. of $14\pi e$ ($n=3$).

RESONATING STRUCTURE

SYNTHESIS OF ANTHRACENE

- FRIEDAL CRAFT REACTION
Benzyl chloride react with itself to form 9,10-dihydroanthracene which readily loses to hydrogen atoms to yield anthracene.

- HAWORTH SYNTHESIS
Benzene is treated with phthalic anhydride in the presence of aluminum chloride to form orthobenzoyl benzoic acid (Friedel craft reaction).

This is then treated with concentrated sulphuric acid to give 9,10-anthraquinone (ring closure reaction) Distillation of anthraquinone with zinc dust yield anthracene.

ICH GUIDELINES

ICH is international conference on harmonization of technical requirements for registration of pharmaceuticals for human use.

ICH is a joint initiative in which regulatory as well as research-based industry initiatives in which regulation as well as research based industry initiative of Europe, Japan & US arrive in scientific & technical discussion regarding the testing procedure & their evaluation to ensure safety, quality & efficacy of medicines. In 1990 European union took the initiative of harmonization of regulatory requirements.

Purpose

The establishment of ICH as a joint regulatory/industry project to improve the efficiency of the process for developing & registering new medicinal product in Europe, Japan & U.S. & to make them available to the patients with minimum delay through harmonization.

ICH serves the following purpose:

1. It monitors, updates, & increases the international harmonization of technical requirements.
2. It ensures safety, efficacy & quality of medicines that should be developed & marketed in a efficient & cost effective manner.
3. It promotes & protects public health from an international perspective.
4. It prevents unnecessary duplication of clinical trials in humans.
5. It reduces animal testing without compromising safety & effectiveness.
6. It improves the efficiency of global drug development.

Participants

ICH steering committee & its sub-groups comprise of representatives from six parties, two governing the regulatory bodies & research based industries in USA, Japan & the European union. The European free trade association (EFTA), world health organization (WHO) & Canada are non voting members of ICH steering committee & sub-group.

Introduction/Background

- The incidence of Invasive Fungal Infection has increased and it constitutes a serious threat to human health and life, especially in immunocompromised and critically ill patients.
- The main focus of antifungal drug utilization evaluation is to optimize antifungal drug use by combining the experience and knowledge of a specialist for preventing its inappropriate use.

Objective

- To assess the prescribing pattern of antifungal agents
- To analyze the causative agents and risk factors associated with invasive fungal infection

Methodology

- STUDY SITE
Lourdes Hospital Post Graduate Institute of Medical Science and Research, Ernakulam Kochi
- STUDY DESIGN
Retrospective, single centered, cross-sectional study

- DATA COLLECTION METHOD
- ✓ Lourdes Mediware system
- ✓ Specially designed data collection form
- ✓ Patient's medical record

Results & Discussion

- Majority of the drugs were prescribed as Definitive (59.19%) and T Fluconazole (39.4%) was the most common drug given. The most common indication for antifungal prescriptions was found to be RTI.
- Appropriateness of antifungal use was assessed based on indication, dosage, contraindication and drug-drug interaction. Overall assessment of antifungal agents and treatment strategy demonstrated that antifungal treatment was appropriate in 41.6% cases, debatable in 36% cases and inappropriate in 22.4% of cases. The chi-square and p value shows a significant association between antifungal agent and treatment strategy.
- The most common culture specimen collected was urine and Candida tropicalis (42.86%) was the frequently isolated organism from it.
- Sepsis (21.4%) was the most common risk factor associated with invasive fungal infection.

Conclusion

- The study found a significant proportion of debatable and inappropriate cases of antifungal prescriptions, so by implementing an effective antifungal stewardship program we could improve the rational use of systemic antifungal agents.

JOURNAL CLUB PRESENTATION BY SAREENITHA, 24082021	Vancomycin-induced nephrotoxicity in non-intensive care unit paediatric patients • Shihnyoung Kwak, Jeong Yeon Kim & Heeyeon Cho PUBLISHED : 19 October, 2021 JOURNAL : Nature Portfolio	ABSTRACT Various Previous data suggests several risk factors for vancomycin-induced nephrotoxicity (VIN), including higher daily dose, long-term use, underlying renal disease, intensive care unit (ICU) admission, and concomitant use of nephrotoxic medications. AIM To investigate the prevalence and risk factors of VIN and to estimate the cut-off serum trough level for predicting acute kidney injury (AKI) in non-ICU paediatric patients
METHODOLOGY This was a retrospective, observational, single-center study, at Samsung Medical Center tertiary hospital, located in Seoul, South Korea. We reviewed the medical records of non-ICU paediatric patients, under 19 years of age with no evidence of previous renal insufficiency, who received vancomycin for more than 48 h between January, 2009 and December 2018. The clinical characteristics were compared between patients with AKI and those without to identify the risk factors associated with VIN, and the cut-off value of serum trough level to predict the occurrence of VIN was calculated by the Youden's index.	RESULTS <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Among 476 cases, 22 patients (4.62%) developed AKI. The Youden's index indicated that a maximum serum trough level of vancomycin above 24.35 µg/mL predicted VIN.• In multivariate analysis, longer hospital stay, concomitant use of piperacillin-tazobactam and serum trough level of vancomycin above 24.35 µg/mL were associated independently with VIN.	CONCLUSION <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Our findings suggest that concomitant use of nephrotoxic medication and higher serum trough level of vancomycin might be associated with the risk of VIN.• This study suggests that measuring serum trough level of vancomycin can help clinicians prevent VIN in paediatric patients
